was a defensive attitude strong enough to keep a substantial section of the German army on guard along the eastern front. But when the Bolshevik regime laid down and invited the Germans to steamroller them at will it was realized that no fight was left in Russia, and that she would have to work out her own destiny without help from her former allies.

From a purely military standpoint. the present operations in Russia are far from disturbing to this government. It is realized, so army officers say, that the further Germany penetrates into that country the longer her lines of communication and supply become, the more area is to be policed and greater force of German troops will be needed to make effective the occupation of that country. This seems to mean that fewer troops will be left to throw against the line in France peace satisfactory to Germany were arrived at with the Russians. GERMANY CANNOT SECURE
